

The experience of being released from prison: A case study

Bringing together current progress into a case study describing the experience of a client who accessed supported accommodation after leaving prison, exploring how the service's model of care seeks to respond to challenges and considering how existing literature might be used to improve outcomes for clients and services.

Daisy Gibbs¹, Michael Doyle², Sarah Larney³, Anthony Shakeshaft¹, Emily Stockings¹, Sara Farnbach¹

We have used data from three ongoing studies

-  Semi-structured qualitative interviews with men who receive supported accommodation from the Rainbow Lodge Program (RL) following release from prison (data presented from one interview);
-  Initial results from our systematic review of the quality and effectiveness of supported accommodation for people released from prison; and
-  Preliminary analysis of the RL service model to develop this case study.

Interview data: Challenges and supports leaving prison

Systematic review: Preliminary findings

Rainbow Lodge: Draft model of care

